An impressionistic landscape painting by William White Warren. The scene depicts a river or canal flowing through a lush, green landscape. In the foreground, there are dense green bushes and a small boat with a red interior. The middle ground is dominated by a large, dark green tree with a white trunk, possibly a willow. The background shows a hazy, blue sky with soft, textured brushstrokes. The overall style is characteristic of the Impressionist movement, with a focus on light and color over fine detail.

WILLIAM WHITE WARREN (c. 1832 – 1911)

This is our second collaboration on the elusive British painter William White Warren. The first, ‘An exhibition of oil sketches by William White Warren c. 1832 – 1911’, was held at 34 Bury Street in the winter of 1995. Today the gallery has been closed to the public for the better part of a year, and this exhibition is taking place online – something that would have been met with incredulity a quarter of a century ago. The old way is definitely the best way however, and we look forward to welcoming you all in person in the very near future.

Born circa 1832, William White Warren is first recorded in 1860, when, living in Peckham, he exhibited seven paintings at the British Institution. In 1869, he held the first of a series of substantial one-man shows of his ‘original oil sketches.’ Warren was evidently well travelled: many of the views in his three recorded one-man shows were from trips to France, Italy, Cyprus and North Africa. They also contained a number of freely sketched views of London and its environs, and it is these that make up the basis of this selection.

Warren achieved some considerable success in his own lifetime. By the 1880s he had the means to amass a large personal collection of pictures and antiquities. These were auctioned off over five days at Christie’s in 1886, ‘in consequence of ill health and the owner going abroad’, with the catalogue giving his address as ‘21 Suffolk Street, Pall Mall’ - as prestigious an address then as now. Amongst a diverse selection of glass, porcelain and metalworks were around 51 of his own works that fetched prices of up to 50 guineas apiece. Despite the success of this sale, Warren appears to have fallen on hard times, and in the last years of his life kept a small shop in Bristol. He died in 1911.

Warren’s posthumous reputation was almost immediately coloured by scandal. Soon after his death the Bath Antique dealer and restorer Alfred Jones had acquired a collection of Warren’s pictures, and misrepresenting them as works by Constable, sold them to the well-known Bond Street dealers Dowdeswell and Dowdeswell. The gallery decided to sue Alfred Jones for fraudulent misrepresentation. The hearing was extensively reported, despite the jury failing to reach a verdict.

Genuine comparison with Constable is certainly optimistic, but Warren’s freedom and verve does offer a refreshing corrective to the stereotype that Victorian paintings are over-fussy. In some cases his sketches border the abstract, and seem to sparkle with pure colour; they carry a sense of joie de vivre, a pleasure in his surroundings that can still be felt today.

Warren found greater appreciation in the 20th century, with his work championed by the famous collector and scholar Paul Wallraf, and later John Gere, Keeper of Prints and Drawings at the British Museum, who donated a view of Crystal Palace to the National Gallery¹ (L876) Today, Warren’s oil sketches can also be found at the V&A, Museums Sheffield, and the Victoria Art Gallery, Bath.
